MEETING SCRIPT · MONCLER

Moncler × Formula 1: meeting script

What this is. The script for presenting our "Moncler × Formula One" deck. This is our second conversation. In the discovery call we listened, asked questions and built the brief. We promised to come back with recommendations. Today we keep that promise.

Who is in the room. The Moncler team is Italian, and English is not their first language. So every line here is short and simple. Read the Remember line, look up, and talk. Ask Moncler is where you stop and let them speak. Lines in italics are notes for you, not to say.

How to speak in this meeting:

1. One idea per sentence. Then stop.
2. Speak slowly. Pause after every number and every name.
3. Use their words: Moncler Collection, Grenoble, Genius, the mountain.
4. No idioms and no slang. Say "it is very popular", not "it is huge right now".
5. Say the number, then say what it means.
6. After a question, wait. Silence is fine. They may be translating in their head.

What we told them in the discovery call (build on it, do not repeat it):

1. We start from Moncler's objectives. We work with teams across the grid, so our advice is neutral. And it costs Moncler nothing: the teams pay our fee.
2. Luxury has already arrived in F1: Louis Vuitton at Monaco, TAG Heuer at Madrid, Moët on the podium, Brioni dressing Alpine.
3. The fans are the next luxury customer: young, more and more female, and premium buyers.
4. Moncler's own story fits: the mountain and Grenoble, the Genius collaborations, Project Mondo G with Mercedes-Benz, and growth in the US and Asia.
5. There are three doors into F1: the sport, a team, or a driver. Eleri joined the call because the driver door is her world, our athlete department.
6. Next steps were a brief, then grid mapping, then recommendations. And we invited them to a Grand Prix.

Before the meeting, add their answers. This script does not know what Moncler told us in the first call. Where you see [brackets], use their own words: what success looks like for them, their priority markets, the customer they want to win next, and their timing. Hearing their own words back is the strongest thing you can do in this meeting.

The thread. Last time we said: "We start from your objectives." Today we show the answer. A driver, as Moncler's face in F1, all year long. And, if they want it, a team around the driver.

The goal today. Not a decision. Leave with three things: their honest reaction, a short list (one or two drivers, maybe one team), and an agreed next step.

Timing. About 30 minutes. Moncler should speak for at least a third of it. Slides 9 to 11 are one build; treat them as one slide.

1 Opening

KEY SLIDE

Remember: Thank them. Remind them of our promise. Today is the answer.

[Smile. Slow down. A short "grazie" at the start is a nice touch, if it feels natural to you.]

Thank you for your time today. It is really good to see you again.

Last time, you told us about Moncler. Where the brand is today, and where you want to go. And we made you a promise. We said: we start from your objectives, and we come back with ideas that fit them.

So today we come back. This is what we found.

It is not a contract. It is not a final offer. It is a direction. And we want your honest opinion as we go. If something does not feel like Moncler, please tell us. That helps us more than anything.

[If Eleri and Bjorn are joining:] Eleri and Bjorn are with us again. You will hear from Eleri when we come to the drivers. That is her world.

Ask Moncler: Before we start: since we last spoke, has anything changed on your side? New priorities, new plans?

2 The opportunity

Remember: F1 is one of the most visible worlds on the planet. Moncler can enter it in a credible way.

Here is the idea in one sentence. Formula 1 gives Moncler a credible way into one of the most visible worlds of sport and culture.

The important word is "credible". Many fashion brands now appear around F1. Some of them look like guests. The best ones look like they belong there. That is our goal for Moncler.

3 The idea

Remember: Not only product in the paddock. A driver who carries Moncler through the whole year.

So the idea is not only to put product in the paddock. The idea is a driver. A real person who brings Moncler Collection into everyday life: travel, cities, race weekends, and the private moments around the race.

Think about the year of a driver. Twenty-four races. Many countries. Early mornings at cold circuits. Evenings in the most photographed cities in the world. Airports, hotels, long flights.

Honestly, when we looked at this life, we thought of Moncler straight away. A brand born in the mountains, made for warmth and for travel. This is a natural home.

4 The objective

Remember: This is the objective as we understood it. Ask if we got it right.

This is the objective we took from our conversation with you. Place Moncler Collection inside global cultural and sporting moments. And introduce the brand to new communities, beyond your existing clients.

The second part is very important. F1 is not only a stage for the clients you already have. It is a way to meet the next ones.

[If they gave you a clear objective in the first call, say it back now in their words: "Last time you said [their words]. This is how we built on it."]

Ask Moncler: Did we understand this correctly? Is something missing, or would you say it differently?

---

5 Why Formula One?

So, why F1? And why now?

6 What F1 has become

Remember: Sport, fashion, travel, technology and entertainment. And people discover it on social media first.

Today, F1 is much more than a race. It is sport, fashion, travel, technology and entertainment, all together. And most people now discover it on their phone, through social media.

This is the big change. The story off the track is now as important as the race. When the drivers arrive at the circuit, the cameras are already waiting. We call it the paddock walk. It is photographed like a fashion show.

As we said last time, it is like a runway. And it happens at every race. So, twenty-four times a year.

7 Scale

Remember: Almost one billion fans. Young. Many women. And millions of people at the races.

Now some numbers. [Slowly.]

982 million fans around the world. That is almost one billion people.

43% of them are under 35. And 42% are women.

And 6.7 million people went to the races across the season.

So F1 gives Moncler two things at the same time. Global reach, on screens everywhere. And real moments, in important cities, with real people. Very few platforms give you both.

Cue: the deck gives no source for these figures, and in the first call you used 827 million fans. See the questions at the end. Get the sources from the deck's author before the meeting.

8 The audience

Remember: F1 fans love fashion, buy premium and earn more. More than football fans. More than basketball fans.

For a luxury house, this is the most important slide. It compares F1 fans with football fans and basketball fans. The number 100 is the average person. Above 100 means more than average.

Look at the four boxes.

Interest in fashion: F1 fans are at 115. Higher than basketball. Higher than football.

Buying the premium version of a product: 132. So about one third more than the average person.

Paying more for quality: 108. And being in the highest income group: 123.

You know football very well in Italy. On all four of these, F1 is ahead of football. And it is ahead of basketball too, the sport people usually call "the fashion sport". [Pause.]

So F1 is not only a big audience. It is the right audience for a house like Moncler.

Ask Moncler: Does this match what you see in your own clients? Where are you strong today? And where do you want to grow?

9–11 Five reasons

KEY SLIDE

Remember: Culture. New luxury clients. Stories all year. Global and local. Fans who welcome partners.

Five reasons why this works for Moncler. I will be quick.

One: culture. A race weekend today is a cultural event. Fashion, music, hospitality, nightlife. Artists and celebrities walk the paddock. It goes far beyond the track.

Two: a new luxury audience. Young, and more and more balanced between men and women. Moncler can meet the luxury clients of tomorrow, without losing anything of its premium position.

Three: stories all year. Twenty-four races means twenty-four big moments. And between the races, the driver's travel and training fill the gaps.

Four: global and local. One brand idea for the whole world. But you choose where to activate: your key markets, your stores, your moments. Last time we spoke about the US and Asia. F1 has three races in the United States, and races in China, Japan and Singapore. [If they named other markets in the first call, name them here: [their markets].]

Five: fans welcome partners. In the 2025 Global F1 Fan Survey, 76% of fans said sponsors make the sport better. That is three fans out of four. But only when the partnership feels authentic, and adds something real.

Ask Moncler: Which markets, cities or stores would you want to start with?

12 Why partner with an F1 driver?

Remember: Last time: three doors. Our answer: start with the driver.

Last time, we explained the three doors into F1. The sport itself. A team. Or a driver.

After the brief, we believe the best first door for Moncler is the driver. A team can come with it, and I will show you that later. But first, the driver. Let me explain why.

[If Eleri is presenting the driver section, hand over here: "Eleri, over to you."]

13 A human point of view

Remember: A logo cannot wear a jacket. A driver can.

A driver gives Moncler a human face inside F1.

A logo cannot wear a jacket. A logo cannot travel, or tell a story. A driver can. The driver wears the brand, lives in it, and talks about it. At the track, at the airport, in the city.

And you already know this way of thinking. With Project Mondo G, you showed that even a car can become a Moncler piece. A driver is the next step. Not an object this time. A person, wearing Moncler, twenty-four weekends a year.

14 Authentic integration

Remember: Moments that already happen: arrivals, travel, client events, fashion weeks.

With a driver, Moncler becomes part of F1 culture. Not a sponsor standing on the side.

Think of the moments that already happen. The arrival in the paddock. The flight to the next race. A client event. A fashion week. In each one, Moncler is there, in a natural way. Nothing is staged. And every moment reflects the brand's lifestyle and heritage.

15 Human storytelling

Remember: Ambition, resilience, excellence. These are Moncler values too.

Drivers live with ambition, resilience and excellence. These are Moncler values too.

Every driver has a personal journey. Years of work. Risk. Victories, and defeats. That journey can tell Moncler's story: the heritage, the craft, the performance. People do not only see it. They feel it.

16 A 365-day platform

Remember: Not only race weekends. All year.

F1 is not only race weekends anymore. A driver gives you moments all year. The races, of course. But also training, travel, interviews, fashion weeks, cultural events and store openings.

So Moncler is visible through the whole year. Not only on Sundays.

17 People connect with people

Remember: People connect with people, not with logos.

And the simplest point of all. People build relationships with people, not with logos.

A driver gives Moncler a face that people like and admire. That creates affection for the brand. And it opens the door to new audiences, outside your current clients.

Ask Moncler: How do you work with ambassadors today? And how do you know when an ambassador is working well?

18 Driver recommendations KEY SLIDE

Remember: Four drivers. Two stars of today. Two stars of tomorrow.

We chose four drivers. Think of them on a line.

On one side, two established names. They bring recognition today. On the other side, two young talents. They bring a longer story, and the chance to grow together with Moncler.

Cue: availability and each driver's personal contracts still need checking. If they ask, say it clearly, the same way as last time: we do not promise availability today; we check first, then we recommend.

---

19 Carlos Sainz

Remember: Timeless. Proven. Elegant, but quiet.

Carlos Sainz. In Italy, you know Carlos well: four seasons in red, at Ferrari.

For us, Carlos means timeless excellence. A race winner. One of the most respected drivers in the paddock. Precise, strong, consistent. And the style is elegant, but never loud. That feels very Moncler: quality that does not follow trends.

Carlos also has a real connection to travel and to performance. A very credible face for Moncler's heritage.

20 Charles Leclerc

Remember: Where top performance meets modern luxury.

Charles Leclerc. In Italy, Charles needs no introduction.

Charles stands where top sport meets modern luxury. One of the most famous faces in F1. Naturally elegant, with real credibility in fashion.

And Charles moves easily between three worlds: the race track, luxury events, and fashion editorials. That mix of performance, innovation and style is very close to Moncler.

Cue: Charles drives for Ferrari. Check any limits the team places on personal fashion deals before the meeting.

21 Arvid Lindblad

Remember: The future. Young, multicultural, a long partnership.

Arvid Lindblad is about the future. One of the most exciting young talents in the sport. Ambitious, creative, and not afraid to be different.

Arvid's background is multicultural, and the outlook is very modern. With Arvid, Moncler could build a long partnership. A bridge between the heritage of the brand and the future of sport and culture.

Cue: Arvid races for Racing Bulls, whose fashion partner is Hugo Boss. Check what that means for a personal deal before the meeting.

22 Oliver Bearman

Remember: Young, modern, natural on camera. A growing name in fashion.

Oliver Bearman. Young, authentic and modern. Younger audiences love Oliver.

Oliver rose very fast through motorsport. That shows determination, and the wish to be excellent. Exactly what Moncler stands for. Oliver is more and more present in fashion, and very natural in front of the camera. A modern way to express Moncler's sporting heritage.

So, here is the choice. [Pause.] Carlos and Charles bring recognition now. Arvid and Oliver bring a story you build together. And the earlier a brand starts with a young talent, the more of that rise belongs to the brand. Some brands choose both: one face of today, and one face of tomorrow.

Ask Moncler: Which of these four feels most like Moncler? And would you prefer one face, or two?

23 Team recommendations

Remember: Three teams. Three very different deals.

A driver can work alone. But some brands also want a team, because a team gives more. Hospitality. The garage. The team's name and images for your campaigns and stores.

Remember the passes we spoke about last time: the passes work all three days, so seven passes can host twenty different guests in one weekend.

Here are three teams. Each one is a very different kind of partnership.

Cue: as we told them in the first call, a team's racewear is a separate contract, held by sportswear brands. The luxury space next to it is its own category. Do not promise that any category is open.

24 McLaren

Remember: Join a winner with real cultural power.

McLaren. One of the oldest and most successful teams in F1, based in England. They won the team championship in 2024 and in 2025. And Lando Norris won the drivers' title in 2025. The drivers are Lando Norris and Oscar Piastri.

McLaren is very active commercially. The fans are young and fashion-aware. And the team already has experience with lifestyle and fashion partners. With McLaren, Moncler joins a winning team with real cultural power.

Cue: check the 2026 results before the meeting. The slide says McLaren is "at the top of the sport right now"; make sure that is still true.

25 Audi

Remember: A brand-new team. Moncler as a founding luxury partner.

Audi. A new team, building its brand from zero. So Moncler would not be one name among many. Moncler could be a founding luxury partner, there from the very beginning.

And the fit is natural. European premium design. Precise engineering. And the team's base is in Switzerland, close to the Alps. That speaks directly to Moncler Grenoble, and to the mountain.

26 Williams

Remember: Heritage, a comeback story, and more control for Moncler.

Williams. A historic British team, founded in 1977. Today it is rebuilding, with strong investment, under the team principal James Vowles. The drivers are Carlos Sainz and Alex Albon.

Williams brings heritage, and a comeback story. People love a comeback. And the entry cost is lower than at a top team. So Moncler gets more visibility, and more control over how the partnership looks.

And here is a nice link. Carlos Sainz drives for Williams. So Williams and Carlos could become one single story for Moncler.

So: three teams, three strategies. Join a winner. Build with a newcomer. Or shape a comeback, with more control.

Ask Moncler: Driver, team, or both? And which of these three strategies feels most like Moncler?

27 The close

KEY SLIDE

Remember: A global platform where performance, style and modern culture meet.

So, to close. Formula 1 is a global platform. It is the place where performance, style and modern culture meet.

With the right driver, Moncler does not simply sponsor F1. Moncler becomes part of how F1 looks and feels. All year long.

28 Next steps

Here is what we suggest. Three simple steps, like last time.

First, your feedback. Today, or in the next few days. Which drivers, which teams, which direction.

Second, we check everything for your short list. Availability, existing contracts, the exact category, and the cost.

Third, we come back with a proposal made only for Moncler. Your markets, your calendar, your objectives. [Say when: e.g. "within three weeks".]

And as always, our advice costs you nothing. The teams pay our fee.

One more thing. Last time we invited you to a Grand Prix. The invitation is still open, and now it has a purpose. Come and see the paddock with these options in mind. And Monza is less than one hour from your office in Milan. [Name a race you can really offer.]

> Ask Moncler: Who else at Moncler should join the next conversation? And is there a moment in your calendar we should build towards: a show, a launch, a store opening?

[Last words, warm and simple:] Thank you very much. We really enjoyed preparing this for you. Grazie.

If still open from the brief, ask

1. Is this for Moncler Collection, Moncler Grenoble, or both?
2. Which markets and cities matter most in the next two years?
3. Which customer do you most want to win next?
4. Are there ambassadors today that we need to work around?
5. Who decides, and who else should be involved?
6. Is there a budget range and a timing window?

Questions Moncler may ask, and simple answers

"Last time you said 827 million fans. Now it is 982 million. Which one is right?"
Good question. Different studies count fans in different ways. 827 million came from one study; the deck uses a wider count. Both tell the same story: a very large audience, and it is still growing. We will send you both sources. [Say this only once you know the deck's source.]

"Isn't F1 too masculine for Moncler?"
Ten years ago, maybe. Today 42% of fans are women, and 43% are under 35. Race weekends are now fashion and culture events. And with a driver, Moncler controls the image: what the driver wears, where, and how it is photographed.

"Will we be just one of many fashion brands in the paddock?"

That is why the choice is important. We look for a driver with no competing luxury deal, and we write exclusivity for your category into the contract. In your category, you are the only one. And at Audi, Moncler could be there from the start.

"Why not just send product to a driver?"

A gift gives you one photo. A partnership gives you a story: the driver's travel and life between races, the right to use the images in your campaigns and stores, and a calendar of moments we plan together.

"What does it cost?"

It depends on the driver or the team, and on the rights. As we said last time, team positions start in the low millions per year. A driver partnership is simpler, and usually costs less than a team. Once you choose a direction, we come back with real numbers. We do not want to guess today.

"Is the driver available?"

Same answer as last time. We do not promise it today. First we check the driver's existing contracts and the team's rules. Then we come back with a clear answer.

"Is this for Moncler Collection or for Grenoble?"

Mainly Moncler Collection, because the objective is cultural moments and new audiences. But Grenoble fits naturally too: the cold races, the mountain, and Audi's Swiss base. It can come in at a later stage.

"How do we measure success?"

Against your objective, and we agree the measures at the start. For example: media value, social engagement, visits to stores in race cities, new clients, and sales of the pieces the driver wears.

"Which driver would you choose?"

It depends on your objective. For recognition now: Charles or Carlos. For a long story that Moncler helps to shape: Arvid or Oliver. If you want both, one of each.

"Where does the data come from?"

The 76% is from the 2025 Global F1 Fan Survey. For the other figures, give the sources from the deck's author. If you do not have them yet, say we will send them straight after the meeting.
