MEETING SCRIPT · MONCLER

Moncler × Formula 1: meeting script

What this is. The script for presenting our "Moncler × Formula One" deck in person. It is our second meeting. In the discovery call we listened and built the brief. Today we bring back our recommendations.

The agenda: three parts, about 30 minutes.

1. Why Formula 1: the opportunity, the fans, and why it fits Moncler. Slides 2 to 11, about 10 minutes.
2. Our recommendations: why a driver, four drivers, and three teams. Slides 12 to 26, about 15 minutes.
3. Next steps. Slides 27 and 28, about 5 minutes.

Tone. Calm and factual. This is advice, not a sales pitch. Let the facts do the work. Say "we think" and "our recommendation is", never "amazing" or "incredible". If a point is weak, say so: it makes the strong points more believable.

How to speak in this meeting (the Moncler team is Italian; English is not their first language):

1. One idea per sentence. Then stop.
2. Speak slowly. Pause after every number and every name.
3. Plain words. No idioms, no slang, no hype.
4. Say the number, then say what it means.
5. Use their words: Moncler Collection, Grenoble, Genius, the mountain.
6. After a question, wait. Silence is fine. They may be translating in their head.

What we told them in the discovery call (build on it, do not repeat it):

1. We start from Moncler's objectives. We work with teams across the grid, so our advice is neutral, and it costs Moncler nothing: the teams pay our fee.
2. Luxury is already in F1: Louis Vuitton at Monaco, TAG Heuer at Madrid, Moët on the podium, Brioni dressing Alpine.
3. The fans are the next luxury customer: young, more and more female, and premium buyers.
4. Moncler's story fits: the mountain and Grenoble, the Genius collaborations, Project Mondo G with Mercedes-Benz, and growth in the US and Asia.
5. There are three ways into F1: the sport, a team, or a driver. Eleri joined because drivers are her area, our athlete department.
6. Next steps were a brief, then grid mapping, then recommendations. And we invited them to a Grand Prix.

Before the meeting, add their answers. This script does not know what Moncler told us in the first call. Where you see [brackets], use their own words: their objective, their priority markets, and your timing for the proposal.

The goal today. Not a decision. Leave with their honest reaction, a short list (one or two drivers, maybe one team), and an agreed next step.

1 Opening and agenda

KEY SLIDE

Remember: Thank them. Say why we are here. Give the three parts.

[Smile, sit back, slow down.]

Thank you for your time today. It is good to see you again.

In our first conversation, you told us about Moncler: where the brand is today, and where you want to take it. We said we would study that and come back with recommendations. That is what we have today.

[If Eleri and Bjorn are joining:] Eleri and Bjorn are with us again. Eleri will take you through the drivers.

The meeting has three parts. [Count them on your fingers.]

Part one: why Formula 1. What the sport is today, who the fans are, and why it fits Moncler.

Part two: our recommendations. First, why we suggest a driver. Then four drivers, and three teams.

Part three: next steps.

It takes about thirty minutes. Please stop us at any time. A question in the middle is better than a question at the end.

And this is not a final offer. It is a direction. If something does not feel right for Moncler, please tell us. That is the most useful thing for us.

Ask Moncler: Before we start: has anything changed on your side since we last spoke?

Part 1 · Why Formula 1

[About 10 minutes. Slides 2 to 11.]

---

2 The opportunity

Remember: A credible way into one of the most visible worlds of sport and culture.

Let me start with the idea in one sentence. [Point to the slide.] Formula 1 gives Moncler a credible way into one of the most visible worlds of sport and culture.

The key word is "credible". Many fashion brands now appear around F1. Some look like guests. Others look like they belong. The difference is not the budget. It is the fit. That is what we looked for.

3 The idea

Remember: Not only product in the paddock. One driver, all year.

The simple option is to put product in the paddock. We think that is not enough.

Our idea is a driver. One person who carries Moncler Collection through the whole year: travel, cities, race weekends, and the private moments around the race.

The reason is practical. A driver's year is 24 races in many countries. Cold mornings at the circuit. Long flights. Evenings in big cities. That is the life Moncler designs for.

4 The objective

Remember: The objective as we understood it. Check it with them.

This is the objective we took from our first conversation. [Read it slowly.] Place Moncler Collection in global cultural and sporting moments. And introduce the brand to new communities, beyond your existing clients.

Everything after this slide answers this objective. So it is important that we got it right.

[If they gave a clear objective in the first call, say it in their words: "Last time you said [their words]."]

Ask Moncler: Is this correct? Would you change anything?

5 Why Formula One?

So, part one. Why Formula 1?

6 What F1 has become

Remember: F1 is now sport, fashion, travel, technology and entertainment, and much of it is told on social media.

Ten years ago, F1 was mainly a race on television. Today it is sport, fashion, travel, technology and entertainment together. And much of the story is now told on social media first.

One moment shows this change clearly: the paddock walk. The drivers arrive at the circuit, and the photographers are waiting, like at a fashion show. It happens at every race. So, 24 times a year.

7 Scale

Remember: Almost one billion fans. 43% under 35. 42% women. 6.7 million at the races.

Four numbers. [Slowly. Point to each box.]

982 million fans. Almost one billion people.

43% are under 35.

42% are women.

And 6.7 million people at the races across the season.

For Moncler, the two numbers in the middle matter most: young people, and women. These are the luxury clients of the next ten years.

The last number matters too. These are real people who travel to a city for three days. And many race cities are also important luxury cities: Miami, Las Vegas, Shanghai, Singapore, Monaco.

So F1 gives you two things together: global reach on screens, and physical moments in key cities.

Cue: the deck gives no source for these figures, and in the first call you used 827 million fans. See the questions at the end. Get the sources from the deck's author before the meeting.

8 The audience

Remember: F1 is ahead of football and basketball on all four. The biggest gap is buying premium.

For a luxury brand, this is the key slide. It compares F1 fans with football fans and basketball fans. 100 is the average person.

[Pause. Let them read.]

On all four measures, F1 fans are ahead of both. Interest in fashion. Buying premium. Paying more for quality. And high income.

But look where the gap is biggest. [Point to 132.6.] Buying the premium version of a product. F1 fans are at 132. Football fans are at 112. That is a gap of about twenty points.

Why does this matter? Income tells you what people can spend. This number tells you what they choose to buy. For a premium brand, the choice matters more than the income.

To be fair, on "pay more for quality" the difference is small: 108 against 104. We would not build the case on that one. The case is fashion interest, premium buying, and income.

Ask Moncler: Does this match your own client data? Where are you strong today, and where do you want to grow?

9–11 Five reasons

KEY SLIDE

Remember: Culture. A new luxury audience. Stories all year. Global and local. Fans accept partners.

Five reasons why this fits Moncler. The short version.

One: culture. A race weekend is now a cultural event: fashion, music, hospitality, nightlife.

Two: a new luxury audience. Younger, and more balanced between men and women. Moncler can reach them without changing its premium position.

Three: stories all year. 24 races give you 24 moments. Between the races, the driver's travel and training keep the story going.

Four: global and local. One idea for the whole world, activated only where you choose: your markets, your stores. Last time we talked about the US and Asia. There are three races in the US, and races in China, Japan and Singapore. [If they named other markets in the first call: [their markets].]

Five: fans accept partners. In the 2025 Global F1 Fan Survey, 76% of fans said sponsors make the sport better. Three out of four. The condition is that the partnership feels authentic and adds something. That is why we focus on fit, not on visibility.

Ask Moncler: Which markets or stores would you start with?

[Close part one:] That was part one: why Formula 1. Now part two: our recommendations.

Part 2 · Our recommendations

[About 15 minutes. Slides 12 to 26. If Eleri presents the drivers, hand over at slide 12 or at slide 18.]

12 Why partner with an F1 driver?

Remember: Three ways in. We recommend starting with a driver.

Last time, we described three ways into F1: the sport itself, a team, or a driver.

Our recommendation is to start with a driver. A team can be added. Let me explain the reasoning in five short points.

13 A human point of view

Remember: The arrival is the driver's moment. That is Moncler's moment.

A logo can be seen. But it cannot wear a jacket, travel, or tell a story. A driver can.

There is also a practical reason. At the circuit, drivers wear team clothing for most of the weekend. The arrival is different. On arrival, the driver chooses the clothes. And the arrival is the most photographed moment of the weekend. For a fashion brand, that is the moment that matters.

You already know this way of thinking. With Project Mondo G, you turned a car into a Moncler piece. A driver is the same idea, with a person.

Cue: check each driver's team rules on what they wear on arrival.

14 Authentic integration

Remember: The moments already exist: arrivals, travel, client events, fashion weeks.

With a driver, Moncler does not need to create moments. They already exist. The arrival at the circuit. The flight to the next race. A client event. A fashion week.

Moncler is simply there, worn by the same person each time. Nothing looks staged. That is what makes it credible.

15 Human storytelling

Remember: The driver's journey carries Moncler's values: ambition, resilience, excellence.

Drivers live with ambition, resilience and excellence. Moncler is built on the same values.

A driver's career has years of work, risk, wins and losses. People follow that story over many years. Moncler's heritage, craft and performance can live inside it.

16 A 365-day platform

Remember: A sponsor is seen on race weekends. A driver is seen all year.

A sponsor is visible on race weekends. A driver is visible all year: races, training, travel, interviews, fashion weeks, store openings. The winter months too, when there are no races.

---

17 People connect with people

Remember: People follow people, not logos.

The last point. People build relationships with people, not with logos. A driver gives Moncler a face that many people already follow. That brings new audiences to the brand, outside your current clients.

Ask Moncler: How do you work with ambassadors today? And how do you measure whether it works?

18 Driver recommendations

KEY SLIDE

Remember: Two established, two emerging. The real choice is now or later.

We chose four drivers. Two are established. Two are young. [Point left, then right.]

The real choice is about time. With an established driver, you pay for recognition today. With a young driver, you pay less today and share the growth. The risk is that a young career may not grow as expected. Both are valid. It depends on your objective.

Cue: availability and personal contracts are not checked yet. If asked, say it the same way as last time: we do not promise availability today; we check first, then we recommend.

19 Carlos Sainz

Remember: Proven, respected, understated.

Carlos Sainz. You know Carlos from four seasons at Ferrari.

A race winner, and one of the most respected drivers in the paddock. Precise, consistent, calm. The style is elegant but understated: quality that does not follow trends. And Carlos has a real connection to travel and performance.

One more fact. Carlos now drives for Williams, one of the teams we recommend. I will come back to that.

20 Charles Leclerc

Remember: The best-known name: top performance and fashion credibility.

Charles Leclerc. In Italy, no introduction is needed.

Charles is one of the most recognised faces in F1, with an elegant image and real fashion credibility. Charles moves easily between the circuit, luxury events and fashion editorials.

For Moncler: of these four, probably the best-known name from the first day. Recognition at this level comes at a higher price.

Cue: Charles drives for Ferrari. Check any team limits on personal fashion deals before the meeting.

21 Arvid Lindblad

Remember: Young, multicultural, modern. A long-term partnership.

Arvid Lindblad. One of the most promising young drivers in the sport. Ambitious, and not afraid to do things differently. Arvid's background is multicultural, and the outlook is modern.

For Moncler: a long partnership. Moncler could be there from the beginning, and grow with Arvid.

Cue: Arvid races for Racing Bulls, whose fashion partner is Hugo Boss. Check what that means for a personal deal.

22 Oliver Bearman

Remember: Young, natural on camera, growing in fashion.

Oliver Bearman. A fast rise through motorsport, which shows determination. Oliver connects well with younger audiences, is growing in fashion, and is natural in front of the camera.

For Moncler: a younger, modern face for the brand's sporting heritage.

[Summarise the four calmly:] So: Carlos and Charles for recognition now. Arvid and Oliver for a story that grows over time. Some brands take one of each.

Ask Moncler: Which of the four feels closest to Moncler? One face, or two?

23 Team recommendations

Remember: A driver gives you a face. A team gives you a place.

Now the teams. A simple way to see the difference: a driver gives you a face. A team gives you a place. Hospitality, the paddock, the garage, and the team's name and images for your campaigns and stores.

On hospitality, remember the point from last time. The passes work all three days, so seven passes can host twenty different guests in one weekend.

We recommend three teams, and they are three different deals. The general rule: the more successful the team, the higher the price, and the less room you have to shape the partnership.

Cue: as we told them in the first call, a team's racewear is a separate contract, held by sportswear brands. The luxury space next to it is its own category. Do not promise that any category is open.

24 McLaren

Remember: The winner. Most visibility, highest price, least room to shape.

McLaren. One of the oldest and most successful teams in F1. Team champions in 2024 and 2025, and Lando Norris won the 2025 drivers' title. The drivers are Lando Norris and Oscar Piastri. Young, fashion-aware fans, and experience with lifestyle and apparel partners.

For Moncler: a link with a winning team. The trade-off: many partners already, and a premium price.

Cue: check the 2026 results before the meeting. The slide says McLaren is "at the top of the sport right now"; make sure that is still true.

25 Audi

Remember: The new team. A founding partner, with a Swiss base and an Alpine fit.

Audi. A new team, building its brand now. Moncler would not be one name among many. Moncler could be the founding luxury partner.

The team's base is in Switzerland. European design, precise engineering, and the Alps: a natural fit with Moncler Grenoble.

The trade-off: a new team needs time to win.

---

26 Williams

Remember: The comeback. Lower cost, more control, and the link with Carlos.

Williams. A historic British team, founded in 1977. Now in a well-funded rebuild under team principal James Vowles. The drivers are Carlos Sainz and Alex Albon.

For Moncler: a lower entry cost than a top team, more visibility for the money, and more say in how the partnership looks. And, as I said, Carlos drives for Williams. So the team and the driver could be one story.

So, three options. Join the winner. Be a founder. Or shape a comeback.

> Ask Moncler: Driver, team, or both? And which option is closest to how Moncler likes to work?

[Close part two:] That was part two, our recommendations. Now part three: next steps.

Part 3 · Next steps

[About 5 minutes. Slides 27 and 28.]

27 The close

KEY SLIDE

Remember: One sentence: performance, style and modern culture.

To summarise in one sentence. [Point to the slide.] F1 is a global platform where performance, style and modern culture meet.

With the right driver, Moncler is not only a sponsor. Moncler becomes part of how the sport looks, all year.

28 Next steps

Three steps, like last time.

One: your feedback. Which drivers, which teams, which direction. Today, or in the next few days.

Two: we check your short list. Availability, existing contracts, the exact category, and the cost.

Three: we come back with a proposal for Moncler only. [When: e.g. "within three weeks".]

As before, our work costs you nothing. The teams pay our fee.

And the invitation from last time is still open. Be our guests at a Grand Prix, and see the paddock with these options in mind. Monza is less than one hour from Milan. [Name a race you can really offer.]

> Ask Moncler: Who else at Moncler should be in the next meeting? And is there a date we should work towards: a show, a launch, a store opening?

[End simply:] Thank you. Grazie.

If still open from the brief, ask

1. Is this for Moncler Collection, Moncler Grenoble, or both?
2. Which markets and cities matter most in the next two years?
3. Which customer do you most want to win next?
4. Are there ambassadors today that we need to work around?
5. Who decides, and who else should be involved?
6. Is there a budget range and a timing window?

Questions Moncler may ask, and simple answers

"Last time you said 827 million fans. Now it is 982 million. Which one is right?"
Good question. Different studies count fans in different ways. 827 million came from one study; the deck uses a wider count. Both say the same thing: a very large audience, and still growing. We will send you both sources. [Say this only once you know the deck's source.]

"Isn't F1 too masculine for Moncler?"
Ten years ago, maybe. Today 42% of fans are women, and 43% are under 35. Race weekends are now fashion and culture events. And with a driver, Moncler controls the image: what the driver wears, where, and how it is photographed.

"Will we be just one of many fashion brands in the paddock?"

That is why the choice matters. We look for a driver with no competing luxury deal, and we write exclusivity for your category into the contract. In your category, you are the only one. At Audi, Moncler could also be there from the start.

"Why not just send product to a driver?"

A gift gives you one photo. A partnership gives you a story: the driver's travel and life between races, the right to use the images in your campaigns and stores, and a calendar of moments we plan together.

"What does it cost?"

It depends on the driver or the team, and on the rights. As we said last time, team positions start in the low millions per year. A driver partnership is simpler, and usually costs less than a team. Once you choose a direction, we come back with real numbers. We do not want to guess today.

"Is the driver available?"

Same answer as last time. We do not promise it today. First we check the driver's existing contracts and the team's rules. Then we come back with a clear answer.

"Is this for Moncler Collection or for Grenoble?"

Mainly Moncler Collection, because the objective is cultural moments and new audiences. Grenoble fits too: the cold races, the mountain, and Audi's Swiss base. It can come in at a later stage.

"How do we measure success?"

Against your objective, and we agree the measures at the start. For example: media value, social engagement, visits to stores in race cities, new clients, and sales of the pieces the driver wears.

"Which driver would you choose?"

It depends on your objective. For recognition now: Charles or Carlos. For a story that Moncler helps to shape: Arvid or Oliver. If you want both, one of each.

"Where does the data come from?"

The 76% is from the 2025 Global F1 Fan Survey. For the other figures, give the sources from the deck's author. If you do not have them yet, say we will send them straight after the meeting.
